Library System Welcomes SmartALEC

Carlisle, Pa. – The Cumberland County Library System is pleased to introduce SmartALEC wireless printing. Customers can use this service to print documents at the library from their personal laptops, library computers or mobile devices.

How does it work? Patrons create an account with SmartALEC and upload documents to their library’s wireless printing website. Patrons also have the option of downloading the SmartALEC app to their mobile device.

“We are excited to offer this convenient service to the people in our community who would like to print documents from their mobile device, laptop, or computer, but don’t have access to a printer at home,” said Tara Major, Public Services and Staff Training Coordinator for the library system. “More and more, we find ourselves doing much of our communication and document sharing on smaller, more portable devices. However, this creates an issue when we need a printed copy of a document – doctor’s forms, school forms, tax documents, etc. Our new wireless printing service eliminates that problem and allows our customers to print their documents at any of the libraries in the Cumberland County Library System.”

For more information on the SmartALEC system, including instructions on using the system and creating an account, visit our website.

Cumberland County’s public libraries lead their communities with educational, cultural, and entertainment programs, as well as authoritative and interesting materials. Visitors can browse and borrow an extensive collection of books, DVDs, and more. In addition to our new wireless printing service, the County’s libraries loan hotspots for wireless internet access on the go, host concerts and movies, bring foreign language immersion to the community, and invite community speakers on topics of current interest.
